From the Charleſton Courier.

OFTEN as the people of America have been bamboozled by their democratic rulers, and by the agents of that cabinet, and often and groſsly as they have been inſulted, and contemptuouſly ſpit upon without even an attempt to redreſs the grievance, they have never been made the ſubjects of ſuch barefaced, impudent and inſulting impoſtures, as theſe which have been practiſed upon them through the whole of the affair reſpecting the right of depoſit at New Orleans. Firſt, having as juſt and indefeaſible a right to a place of depoſit as they have to the navigation of the Hudſon or Potomac, they are deprived of it at once by the mere caprichio of a deſpot. Their commerce is of courſe interrupted and injuriouſly checked; the produce which conſtitutes that commerce is left to rot; many who depended on the regular tranſit of their goods, through that depoſit, are left to ſuſtain a great loſs, and, what is ſtill worſe, the nation is moſt groſsly inſulted. What is the leaſt that ought to have been done? Certainly ſecurity of the place of depoſit in future, and ample reparation for the paſt ought to have been inſiſted upon. Our ſpirited Chief Governor, however, feels that it is too unreaſonable a thing to demand both thoſe, and ſo gives up the latter, and applies only to the former. "Poh, poh, ſays he, what ſignifies the paſt—to be ſure we have got a few tweaks and kicks, but no matter now, the pain is over; we will get this worthy kicking gentleman to promiſe upon honor that he will not kick again: ſo let all by-gones be by-gones, let us forget and forgive all paſt rubbers, like good Chriſtians, as WE are, and begin a new reckoning. You ſhall ſee how handſomely I will coax this king into good humour: and is not that better than going to fight, for a trivial offence? A mere joke, a little tweaking and kicking, which, on my ſould, I do not feel, whatever you may, and which at worſt may be cured by a little of that ſalve—that balſam of ſierabras ſo plentifully ſerved out gratis at the quack ſhops and diſpenſaries of the democratic preſſes—called miſrepreſentation—and which, let me tell you, citizen ſubjects, are apples and nuts, when compared to the tremendous roar of a gun, the whiz of a bullet, or a direful thruſt in the body from a bayonet."

So far, if the thing was not very brilliant, it ſmacked ſufficiently of prudence and caution, and has its merits, though we are not poſitively bent upon inſiſting that thoſe were of the very higheſt kind. But let us contemplate the ſequel, and conſider what has been effected even by coaxing and ſubmiſſion.

The King of Spain, in his great moderation, juſtice, anxious deſire to cultivate friendly intercourſe with America, and above all, modeſty, informs our Executive that the right of depoſit is reſtored, tho' he has given up into the hands of the French the place, and with it the right of reſtoring that depoſit. "When it was mine, ſays his long eared Majeſty, I chucked you out of it neck and heels, like cowardly blackguards, as you were, but now it is not mine, I reſtore you full permiſſion to take it, if you can, from France, becauſe I ſee you are worthy gentlemen, and, above all, brave fellows, bardios, valor fiſſimos Hidalgoes!"

Talking on this ſubject laſt evening to a friend of ours, he told us the following appoſite ſtory.

Philip Faintheart fell unexpectedly into the poſſeſſion of a very large eſtate, at a time of life when his faults could not be mended, nor the failings of his nature corrected by habit. Having been originally bred to the trade of a taylor or ſome ſuch ſedentary occupation, he had acquired an incurable crouching poſture, & greatly increaſed the natural feebleneſs of his heart, mind and body. When he came down to the country to take poſſeſſion of his eſtate, he found himſelf near neighbor to an old Baron, the head of an antiquated family, proud as Lucifer, hot as pepper, and tho' honeſt enough himſelf, the ſlave of an upſtart knave of the name of Fungus, who had thurſt himſelf by a forced match into the baron's family and lorded it over them all. By this man poor Faintheart was repreſented to the baron as a low fellow, unfit for good company, one that ought to be treated with contempt, or if neceſſary kicked, and in ſhort one to whom no delicacy ſhould be obſerved. "By the way (ſays this raſcal) you need not be afraid to treat him ill, for he will be hang'd ere he will fight!" The conſequence of this was that the baron threw down poor Faintheart's fences—"Go to law," ſaid ſome of his real friends—Alas, replied Faintheart, the baron is a paſſionate man, and I muſt not vex him or he would play the devil with me!—Fight him! exclaimed ſome of Faintheart's more ſpirited real friends. He grew pale with horror.—However the Baron met him one day upon the road, and pinched his ear, and tweaked his noſe, and kicked him luſtily on the ſeat of honor. Fortunately honor was abroad, ſeldom reſiding at that ſeat, ſo the baron might have kicked to dooms day without finding reſiſtance. Faintheart however wrote an humble petition to him requeſting to let his bounds be reaſſigned to him, and ſaying he would forgive the drubbing, and rebuild the fences at his own expence. The baron took time to conſider the petition, and in the mean time ſold off his eſtate to that upſtart knave Fungus, who firſt perſuaded him to attack that poor pippin-ſqueezer. He then but not before, deigned to anſwer his petition.—"There ſaid he, let the fellow take his old boundaries, and build up his fences, if he will, for I have no further concern with the eſtate. I give him leave, he may obtain that of of Fungus if he can.—And as to himſelf, he has nothing to fear from me—I ſhall kick him no more, for being about to leave the country, he will hardly fall in my way.

This ſtory we think ſo completely illuſtrative of the New Orleans tranſaction, that we could not refrain from giving it a place. Nevertheleſs if the affair ſhould end in the complete eviction of the ſame neighbor, either by purchaſe or otherwiſe, from Florida, we ſhould endeavor to forget the loſs of that honour, which can never be retrieved.

From the ſame.

"Then there's hope a great man's memory may outlive his life half a year."

To miſtake the means for the end, has been the folly and misfortune of many, but wilfully to ſubſtitute the former for the latter, is now the only wiſdom and the beſt moral diſpoſitions of our democratic adminiſtration and its agents. To money, which can be uſeful only as it ſerves for the conſervation of life, honour and character, honour, character and every thing but life, are, by them, ſyſtematically ſacrificed. In like manner morals and virtue, for the conſervation of which civil policy and government are formed, are themſelves ſacrificed to the moſt abſurd political dogmas, and the moſt ridiculous viſionary ſtate ſpeculations. The decline into evil of even the moſt rapid reprobate, is ſo ſlow, and the deteriora tion of his morals ſo gradually ſhaded down from light to darkneſs, as ſcarcely to be perceptible at any one given point. But to form a juſt judgment of the actual change, we muſt take the ſtandard of a diſtant period, and compare it with that of the preſent; as in the ſcience of mechanics, the increaſe in the thickneſs of a wedge is ſcarcely perceptible, by a compariſon of any two contiguous points, but is viſible and obvious when the remote ends, that is to ſay, the back and the edge, are compared with each other.

"By their fruits ſhall you know them," is a ſaying as true as it is old. If by the fruits of our preſent rulers' conduct, that conduct ought to be judged, what a contemptible, or rather horrible opinion muſt be entertained of it, by all who will take the pains to look back and circumſtantially examine the hideous depravity of ſentiment and feeling, which the wicked workings of only two years have produced in the public mind. What a total change from all that was noble, amiable, and eſtimable, to all that is grovelling, odious, and diſguſting: from honorable pride of the heroes of our country, to a total diſregard, nay worſe, open diſreſpect of their names or memories; from the animated effuſions of zealous gratitude, to injuſtice, to ingratitude, and to perfidy towards our benefactors

Let us look back to a period no farther remote than ſix years! Can we forget the affection, the gratitude, the veneration, bordering on enthuſiaſm, which every true American at that time felt for the immortal WASHINGTON? Who that uttered his name but accompanied it with the moſt impaſſioned, rapturous expreſſions of reverence and of pride? Who that ever tho't of him without ſending up a prayer to Heaven to ſhower down bleſſings on his venerable head? The ſacrilegious wretch who ſhould have but whiſpered a word to his depreciation, would he not have been hooted with execration from ſociety, blighted with geneal contumely, and blaſted with the curſes of every honeſt American; Yet now what do we ſee? We ſee that auguſt, that ever to be revered name, which, in whatever nation or language men ſpeak of it, (America alone excepted) is never ſeparated from reſpect & admiration, daily traduced by villains, by the ſcum and offſcourings of the earth, by the offal of a diſtempered world: And what is worſe, we ſee Americans endure it—nay, read the foul, atrocious, ſacrilegious calumnies—without (in what Lord Bacon calls wild juſtice) expelling from their haunts the abominable calumniators. Shall we ſtop here, or ſhall we proceed and follow up the offenders to the acme of their guilt? We ſee the monſters who have thus calumniated, and daily do calumniate him taken into the higheſt favor; hugged with horrid glee and delight to the iron boſoms of magiſtracy; honoured with diſtinguiſhed attention, applauded, abetted, encouraged and rewarded, by thoſe very perſons whoſe duty it is to hold out to the maſs of the people, an example of gratitude to that great founder of American Independence, and of abhorrence and marked contempt for his calumniators.

We ſee Paine, the open and avowed enemy and calumniator of Waſhington, diſtinguiſhed by the marked regard and friendſhip of the Preſident of the United States; not to mention the pecuniary rewards beſtowed upon Mr. Callender for his "Proſpect before us"—not to tarniſh our paper by mentioning the names of thoſe wretched ſubaltern villifiers of that great man, whoſe ſtupidity renders malignity innoxious——and whoſe bad fame makes their cenſure, ſo far as it goes, an honor. Yes, Americans! your common father, your benefactor, the founder of your empire, ſource of your independence, the hero whom you once juſtly revenced, idolized, is daily made the ſport of the very worſt and baſeſt of mankind.

"He whoſe word might yeſterday,
"Have ſtood againſt the world, now lies dead,
"And none ſo poor to do him reverence."

Eternal ſhame to thoſe who ſlander him!—Eternal ſhame to thoſe who foſter and abet the ſlanderers, and ſure, in the eyes of a looking-on world, eternal, indelible ſhame muſt await that people who ſuffer it; for what muſt the civilized nations of the earth (in all of which the name of WASHINGTON is joined with thoſe of the wiſeſt, beſt and greateſt of men, and recorded with the moſt glorious heroes, ſages and benefactors of mankind) think of that people, who having ſhared among them all the benefits of his life & ſervices, are ſo loſt to all ſenſe of pride, honor, juſtice and gratitude as to nouriſh in their boſoms the open poſthumous enemies who deny to him the ſacred immunities of the grave, who, like Hyænas break into the manſions of the dead, and take up the peaceful aſhes of departed worth, to ſcatter it with the winds of heaven in malice and unfounded revenge. Yes this! work, this wicked work, is now going on.—Look to it Americans! reſiſt it, or ſink into the dependent nothingneſs from which the virtues, the valor and the wiſdom of WASHINGTON originally raiſed you! It is groſs, is is unworthy, it is abominable, to be enjoying the gifts of thoſe whom you miſuſe, and openly eating the bread of unthankfulneſs.

Order of the day—3d Floreal.

THE brigands renew their hoſtilities to the north; they have directed two ſtrong attacks againſt Fort Dauphin, which have proved fruitleſs to them, and added greatly to the glory of our brave troops.

On the 13 Germinal, being favored with interior intelligence, they appeared to the number of fourteen hundred, aſſiſted by traitors; a great number of them having reached the centre of the town, whilſt the remainder of them were ſurrounding, and preſſing it on all quarters. This critical moment redoubled the energy of the garriſon: the prompt and vigorous meaſures of general Quantin, and the bravery of the grenadiers of the 110 half brigade, proved favorable. After two hours combat, they were repulſed from the town and its vicinity, leaving behind them upwards of 50 dead, and a great number of wounded. The traitors from the interior, were diſcovered and arreſted.

On the 18th inſtant, the military organized, and headed generals, made a new attack up Dauphin. NEW YORK, June 6.

Jamaica papers of the 7th ult. men that no merchant veſſel ſails from Iſland for England without convoy. conſequence of the preſent poſture of af in Europe, Admiral Duckworth, on ſtation, had offered the merchants ſend the Ganges frigate to England convoy any veſſels which might be re to ſail by the 8th May; which was cepted.

On the 18th instant, the brigands, military organized, and headed by their generals, made a new attack upon Fort Dauphin. They began at five in the morning; at seven they were in possession of all directions, completely routed, upwards of 40 dead, among whom a great number of officers were found on the spot; the remainder of the day they were employed in carrying away the wounded.

General Quantin gives the highest praise of the conduct of the garrison of Fort Dauphin, in these two attacks; he cites with distinction the grenadiers of 110 half brigade; the adjutant commandant Dumont; the officers and crew of the sloop of war Sageſſe, commanded by lieutenant Barnesche, capt. Teissere was wounded, and lieutenant Boiffiere of the grenadiers of the 110' half brigade; Peliffier, sergeant major; Albany and Porie, Sergeants; Rivera, corporal; Retord, corporal, Marna, Deleau, Ofrey, wounded, all of them belong to the 110 half brigade; as also the lieutenant, aid de camp of Bardouil wounded.

The chief of Battalion Aurange, the two officers of the same corps, under his command, and the gunners distinguished themselves equally.

Port de Paix was also attacked on the 22d of Germinal; in the afternoon of the same day, the enemy all at once destroyed several of the batteries, and played on the forts Laveaux and Pageot. At dusk the attack became more general and serious, and at eleven, all forts were attacked. The brigands had with them very large ladders 20 feet long. The extreme superiority of their number enabled them to put some of the ladders up, through these means they ascended the great Fort, and for a few moments stopped at the Block house, but they were drove from there with a considerable loss on their part. The forts Laveaux and Peageot were so well protected by the artillery fire from the small forts and the sloops of war of the station, that the enemy could not make use of the ladders they had provided themselves with.

The brigands left 57 dead round our ports; a great many were carried away; the number of their wounded must have been considerable. We only lost one man, and had two wounded. Commandants Boccus and Rippelt praise greatly the conduct of the garrison, and particularly the Spanish detachment, lately arrived from Port Dauphin, which shewed a calmed and unmoved courage.

General Fressinet informed us that the brigands are gathering themselves together at the plain of Cul de Sac, with the design of an incursion, and gave orders for an attack as a notice; in consequence of which, general Lavalette, having organised a column composed of the detachment of the 5th light, 8th of the line, and of 30 national dragoons of Port au Prince, found himself this morning at 5, in view of the brigands; he immediately attacked them, and took from them three of their strongest positions, in which the enemy was intrenched. The result of this operation was the taking of a standard; upwards of thirty brigands dead on the spot, and the remainder of the horde disbanded. We had 12 wounded.

General Lavalette is perfectly satisfied of the troops who fought under his command on the occasion. He cites with distinction the chief of battalion Beret of the 5th light; the commandant of the colonne Mobil, Saint Guiron, wounded; Lieutenant Vissignant of the 5th light, who in these three attacks was always the first in entering the enemies intrenchments; aid de camp Caron, and the officer of the etat major Oary, who followed Vissignat; Phillippe Rochambeau and Bobin, riflemen of the 5th light were remarked by their courage and ardour.

The general of brigade, chief of the etat major.

NEW YORK, June 6.

Jamaica papers of the 7th ult. mention, that no merchant vessel sails from that Island for England without convoy. In consequence of the present posture of affairs in Europe, Admiral Duckworth, on that station, had offered the merchants to send the Ganges frigate to England, to convoy any vessels which might be ready to sail by the 8th May; which was accepted.

Captain Waterman, of the ship Fortitude, informs that on the day of his departure from Lisbon a packet arrived there from London with intelligence to the 25th of Abril. The mail was not opened before he sailed; but in a conversation with one of the passengers, he learnt that the prospect of Peace was brightening.

Our correspondent at Gibraltar, under date of the 4th May, writes us as follows: "A new Proclamation has been issued by the Governor, putting the inhabitants under War regulations and restrictions. The new Governor, General Trigge, is arrived: but whether he will take the command or not, is uncertain; some say the Duke of Kent will remain, and General Trigge go to Malta. If this should be the case, no doubt remains but that the Duke will be sent off by the soldiery per force. His discipline is severe, and he is a friend to the inhabitants: these, alone, would be sufficient motives for rendering any governor odious in the eyes of the military. A day or two ago there was a hot press in our bay for seamen, from all the English merchantmen, by the frigate Amazon, which is waiting to take the Duke of Kent to England. He will stop at Lisbon to visit his brother.

"The English and Spanish merchants residing in Spain are alarmed at the prospect of a speedy war. The Spanish court has taken off the quarantine imposed upon American vessels, provided a Spanish consular certificate be attached to their bills of health.

"On the 29th ult. arrived ship Trent from Baltimore. No papers has been issued from the printing office here for 5 weeks. Our letters, just received by this days mail, contain the opinion of the merchants in the different ports of France, Spain, Italy, and Portugal; they are uniformly in one sentiment —"that war is inevitable."

Captain Leary, of the brig Francis Nixon, informs us that when be left Gibraltar (4th May) a hot press for seamen was carrying on there; and that the Duke of Kent was to sail on the 5th in the Amazon frigate for Lisbon, having been succeeded in the command by Gen Trigge. Markets dull; flour from 8 to 8 1-2 dollars per barrel.

THURSDAY, JUNE 9.

[The following interesting article is copied from the EXPOSITOR of yesterday. We presume after such a distinguished specimen of the attention of so distinguished a citizen as the HONORABLE POST-MASTER GENERAL, of his wish to give the public correct information, no one will dare doubt that the utmost possible degree of care is taken by our foreign ministers to be early and correctly informed on every subject interesting to their country: and that we must undoubtedly be indebted to the indefatigable zeal, or perhaps to the favorable footing on which Mr. Livingston is with Madame Bonaparte, for the article above alluded to. It may possibly be intended as a gentle hint, that the like would be quite acceptable from us—what a pity the information had not arrived in time for Mr. Jefferson to have given Mr. Monroe some necessary instructions relative thereto—we sincerely hope, however, it may not be thought of sufficient consequence, to justify sending Beau Dawson and a government ship again to France, tho' we know of no person so well qualified for executing a mission to a lady as the aforesaid Beau, the President himself excepted.]

"The city of Antwerp has determined
"to present Mad. Bonaparte, a diamond
"Aigrette of great value and beauty;
"and a Fete is to be given to the First
"Consul on the Scheldt, which will surpass, in magnificence, any thing ever
"seen in Belgium. At Malines they
"are now at work, in preparing a splendid ROBE of Lace for Madame Bonaparte. Several letters from the banks
"of the Rhine, state that an interview
"will positively take place between
"the King of Prussia and the First Consul at Dusseldorf.

Triumph in Washington.——Observing in the Expositor yesterday, a long list of names, marked with the letter big D, I hastily run them over, and the editoral remarks, before I reflected that some better account was probably given at the head of the paragraph. At first, I supposed it was a regulation of Council and might be a city ear mark: however, it appears that it was intended as a mark for City Councilmen, and by the account given we are informed that the letter D, in the city, is preferred to immense property and individual respectability. This is a truth which strangers should know, because should men of property and respectability move to the city, they may have their property managed by persons possessing neither; but those that are branded with the letter D, (whether it stands for Demo, Devil, Debtor, Defaulter, or property and individual respectability Done-Over, I know not) may there be exalted, and his manners, opinions and habits, be they what they may, have their influence in the remotest corners of the union, by ingrafting them upon Congress-men. Should men of immense property and individual respectability, incline to move to the district, they are informed that the town of Alexandria yet holds those things in estimation; the town has had the fever the City now is infected with, and have got perfectly cured, and no appearance of the disease returning: the letter D. here is perfectly understood.

FROM AN ENGLISH PAPER.

An Ecce Home for Satan's Picture Gallery.

Hastily sketched on seeing the portrait of Thomas Pain, alias Paine, who has taken such pains to prove that religion is a farce, and that a future state is nothing but a chimerical phantom.

Behold the man, with righteous heav'n at strife
Who scouts the character of eternal life,
Behold, the man who labors to destroy
Our present peace, and hopes of future joy.
Behold the man, who bars our thirst to sip
That cup which comfort brings to every lip.
Behold the man, who virtue's base would mock,
And substitute a quicksand for a rock.
Behold the man, who makes of life a clog
For man to drag, then perish like a dog.
Behold the man who frenzy's shafts hath hurl'd,
To spread delirium thro' this wayward world.
Behold the man, who aims to strike all dumb,
Who dare to whisper of a world to come!
Behold the man, who seeks to shut our ears,
Against the voice which every mourner cheers,
And smooths our passage thro' this "vale of tears."
Behold the man, who wrests the awful rod,
And pow'r to punish, from the hand of God!
Behold the man, who future bliss denies,
And pulls down jurisprudence from the skies!
Behold the man, who spurns both scale and beam,
and deems the poise of justice all a dream!
Behold the man, who settles with a nod.
A world ungovern'd, and a sleeping God!
Behold the man, who talks of virtue's light,
Yet sinks her deathly rays in endless night!
Behold the man, who vice pretends to blame,
Yet trumpets vice and virtue's end the same!
Behold the man, who living, boasts to call
Annihilation the great end of all!
Behold the man with atheistic pride,
Who dares the realms of torment to deride!
Behold the man, whose heart exults to tell
No realms exist where endless pleasures dwell.
Behold the man, who never dar'd maintain,
"The good shall die to live where dwells no PAIN!"
